

David Harum: A story of American life

No, he said, nothin haint gone exac ly wrong, sye might say not yet; but I done that thing I was tel Hnye of to-day. Done what thing? she asked perplexedly. I telegraphed to New York, he replied, fer that young feller to come on the young man General Wolsey wrote me about. I got a letter from him to-day, an I made up my mind the sooner the quicker, an I telegraphed him to comes soon she could. I forgit what you said his name was, said Aunt Polly. There shis letter, said David, handing it across the table. Read it out loud. You read it, she said, passing it back after a search in her pocket; I must a left my specs in the settin -room. The letter was as follows: Dear Sir: I take the liberty of addressing you at the instance of General Wolsey, who spoke to me of the matter of your communication to him, and was kind enough to say that he would write you in my behalf. My acquaintance with him has been in the nature of a social rather than a business one, and I fancy that he can only recommend me on general grounds. I will say, therefore, that I have had some experience with accounts, but not much practice in them for nearly three years. Nevertheless, unless the work you wish done is of an intricate nature, I think I shall be able to accomplish it with such posting at the outset as most strangers would require. General Wolsey told me that you wanted some one as soon as possible.(Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and dont occur in the book.)About the Publisher Forgotten Books is a publisher of historical writings, such as: Philosophy, Classics, Science, Religion, History, Folklore and Mythology.Forgotten Books Classic Reprint Series utilizes the latest technology to regenerate facsimiles of historically important writings.
