

Relative Freedom: Life is a bag of choices

Pen Witter, like most men; doesn't spill emotions out there to be inspected, dissected, or corrected. Our flaws are what make us different, battle scars, rites of passage. There's no makeup to hide us, we resist style that might make us look in, choosing black, brown, or blue...tried, tested, and true. Not surprising to those that care about us, just down below our stoic indifferent surface, heart blood and emotions flow. Out there hunting the beast, trying to provide for the clan back at the cave, proving our courage...there is fear. We want to belong and be understood; we just don't want you to know we do. Pen learns to cry, and warriors need more than chasing and killing the beast. RELATIVE FREEDOM is about reaching the point where family demands need him to tear away from a life built, old friends, and his old wooden fishing boat Hringhorni, named for the great ship of Viking lore. His vagabond escape from Mustang Island off the Texas coast after selling Hringhorni is along the back roads of Southwest America driving Silver pulling Tonto...step van road-home and miraculous tool trailer...as he slowly pieces together what will stir his fire and restore adventure. Never religious, all about making money, he meets the cast of characters in small town coffee shops that direct his reformation. Sitting in Silver on Texas 349 not far from Mexico, low ground fog creeps onto the floorboard around his ankles as mid-winter morning sun hits cool desert moisture, Pen has killed the engine, opened the doors, and now sits in absolute perfect quiet, still on the pavement, no cars in sight, looking across the glistening cloud, and realizes this is his ground-zero freedom...a new life begins. He will search for people in need, never taking money like before, helping repair their house, church, or damaged life. During his journey, Pen finds that freedom from family responsibility and demanding customers is but relative freedom; empty without connection, caring, and enduring love. Come ride with Pen Witter, see the sunsets that bring reverence, meet people that prove life is constant change, and feel Pen seek and find balance.
